Medical School faces budget cuts

Layoffs and salary cuts considered; faculty express surprise, concern

By Huan Le
Staff Writer

The USC School of Medicine is considering faculty layoffs and salary cuts to respond to a projected $11 million deficit.

In letters given to the school's more than 1,000 faculty members, Dean Stephen J. Ryan said the USC School of Medicine could no longer avoid fixing budgetary problems. He said that the measures to correct the deficit would hurt.

When the letters, dated March 22, were distributed, one faculty member present at the meeting said that the atmosphere was charged and people walked out in shock.

About 300 faculty members attended the meeting, which was open to all, said Brenda Maceo, director of media relations for the Health Sciences Campus.

A follow-up letter to faculty was released April 7.

Non-faculty staff were notified of the budget problems on Thursday by a fax sent from the USC Health Sciences Campus Public Relations department. The fax was a copy of a Thursday Los Angeles Times article that spoke of the cuts. Many employees contacted by the Daily Trojan said they were unaware of the cuts until the fax was sent.

Bob Ulrich, assistant professor of clinical pharmacy, said, "I didn't even know about it (the budget cuts) until today." He had been away from the office for only a few days, he said.

One non-tenured faculty member teaching at the medical school said she is "very nervous about the whole thing."

The news comes just two months before the school's budget proposal is due. Ryan cited radical changes in the health care industry as the reason for budgetary constraints. A faculty committee will propose alternatives to lay-offs and salary cuts by the end of the month.

"(They're) still in the process of trying to find out what they are going to do," Maceo said.

The budget cut amounts to about 20 percent of the medical school's budget.

"We have to address these things, because if we don't, we may not be around," Ryan said.

The budgetary problems are attributed to competitive pressure from insurance companies and health maintenance organizations, leading to belt-tightening throughout the health care industry. Since USC's School of Medicine is a medical school and a research center, both of which carry high costs, USC is

Banquet honors volunteers; students, others awarded

By Laura Margoni
Staff Writer

Volunteerism, a long and proud tradition at USC, was celebrated at the first annual Volunteer Awards Banquet held at the Faculty Center.

Individual students, a student organization and local volunteers were honored Wednesday evening for their efforts to make a difference in the neighborhoods closest to campus. This is not the first time that volunteer efforts have been recognized, but this year's event was on a larger scale than ever before.

David Crandall, director of the Office of Student Activities and an award presenter, said that in the past the event had been conducted during the day in an auditorium.

"It was a nice event," Crandall said, "but it was exclusively student recognizing student. We wanted to make it more special and extend the program to include the faculty, staff, and members of our community."

Most of the awards ceremony focused on recognizing student volunteer efforts.

"Sixty percent of USC students are active in some kind of community service," said Kristine Dillon, interim vice president for student affairs. "This meaningful involvement enriches not only their education but also their understanding of the needs and opportunities in our neighborhood."

The first student award presented was the Student Organization Volunteerism Award. The honor went to Troy Camp, the oldest student-operated charity organization in the nation. Representatives of Troy Camp received a plaque and the chance to designate a nonprofit organization to receive a $250 donation in Troy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The California Highway Patrol said Thursday it lacks the evidence to seek charges in the death of a Gardena family whose car swerved to avoid racing motorists.

But it said the case will remain under investigation and said it could request criminal charges later.

A 17-year-old boy from Glassell Park drove one of the cars allegedly involved in the race, and another driver fled the scene, the CHP said. A family of four died in the crash.

"In some people's minds he may be liable, but there's more to this case than meets the eye," CHP Officer Dwight McDonald said. "We've got to get all of our ducks in a row in this case."

Prosecutors said evidence must show that the boy violated the law and in doing so caused the deadly crash.

The boy, who has not been identified because he is a minor, told officers he was racing another car on the San Diego Freeway. The other motorist could face hit-and-run charges, McDonald said.

The collision occurred late Sunday when the Davalos family was passed by a speeding car, driven by the 17-year-old. The car struck a concrete freeway divider and bounced off in the direction of the Davalos' car.

When the Davalos' car swerved out of the way, it hit a median, flipped over and slid across the highway. The car struck a temporary wall and burst into flames, killing all of its occupants.

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — A federal appeals court opened the way Thursday for Shannon Faulkner to become the first woman to take part in military training at The Citadel.

A panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel agreed that South Carolina's all-male military college violated her rights under the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment in refusing to admit her.

The 2-1 decision upheld an order last July by U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck, who ended 151 years of all-male military education at the Charleston school.

Faulkner has been attending classes at The Citadel since January 1994 under an order from Houck but had not been allowed to take part in military training or wear a uniform while the case was being appealed.

The appeals court ordered the school to admit Faulkner to the corps of cadets in August unless it can come up with an alternative plan to give women military-style education by then.

But the panel also said it was unlikely the school could have such a plan ready by the fall, when Faulkner will be a junior. Cadets cannot begin the program after their junior year.

"We're basically where we were last summer, playing beat the clock again," said Faulkner, a 20-year-old sophomore. "I'm very optimistic about getting in, it's just how are things going to work out."

The Citadel's lawyer, Dawes Cooke, said school officials have been working on an alternative plan.

TOKYO (AP) — Matsushita decided to sell most of MCA Inc. because it didn't have the capital or expertise to keep the Hollywood studio operator a leader, the president said Thursday.

Yoichi Morishita, president of Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., said it will use the money from the sale mainly for additional factory investments in North America, including Mexico. It currently has 22 factories in the region.

Matsushita, which makes the Panasonic, Technics and Quasar brands, will return to its core business of consumer electronics, Morishita told reporters in Tokyo.

Matsushita announced Sunday that it has agreed to sell 80 percent of MCA to Canada's Seagram Co. for $5.7 billion. Less than five years earlier, it had bought the company in a widely heralded plan to combine consumer electronics with movies, music and other kinds of entertainment.

But Morishita said the situation had changed greatly because of the arrival of a "multimedia era" which requires entertainment companies like MCA to form expensive tie-ups with a host of "providers" like cable companies, broadcasters and on-line computer services.

Despite its deep pockets, Matsushita doesn't have the needed resources or the expertise to make the necessary moves, he said.

His comments appeared to support the position of MCA's top management, which had launched a public feud with Matsushita last year.

Next to receive recognition were three individuals who have consistently donated their time to programs affiliated with the Student Volunteer Center. Michael Ribak, Gurpal Dosanjh and Karey Dachik all received award certificates.

The Buick Volunteer Spirit Awards went to three students for their outstanding community service. Susan Cole, a senior majoring in political science; David Gabler, a sophomore business major; and Carrie Spencer, a senior majoring in international relations and the study of women and men in society, all received plaques and five shares of common stock in General Motors Corp.

"I'm really excited," Gabler said after receiving the award. "I wasn't expecting to get it, but I feel honored and proud."

Morton Schapiro, dean of the College of Letters, Arts, and Sciences then presented four students with Grace Ford Community Service Scholarships. These scholarships are awarded for the upcoming academic year to recognize students' off-campus community service from high school through college. A certificate and a $2500 scholarship each went to Karen Cifarelli, a junior majoring in international relations; Erika Denise Felix, a junior majoring in psychology; Sarah Szalavitz, a junior majoring in political science; and John Wayne Weems, a junior majoring in sociology and journalism.

The last student award of the evening was the Extraordinary Community Service Award. Schapiro presented the award to Elleney Stacey Soter in recognition of her extensive work in mentoring and learning-enrichment programs for urban youths. Soter, a senior majoring in international relations, received a plaque and a check for $1,000. Soter's name will also be inscribed on the permanent plaque in the foyer of Grace Ford Salvatori Hall.

"I'm very honored (and) I think it's probably one of my greatest accomplishments," Soter said. "I'm just ecstatic about getting (the award)."

Students were not the only ones presented with awards. Five local volunteers were also honored for their efforts to make a difference in the neighborhoods surrounding USC.

The honorees were in five categories — community resident volunteer, non-resident volunteer, USC staff volunteer, USC faculty volunteer, and USC alumni volunteer. The winners were chosen by a committee of USC staff members and community representatives.

Carlos Lopez Holguin, executive director of the Adams and Vermont Community Center Inc., was the winner in the community resident volunteer category. Margo Leonetti O'Connell, vice president of the Education Consortium of Central Los Angeles and president of the board of directors of the California Museum of Science and Industry, was the winning non-residential volunteer.

> "Volunteering is really more precious than gold. It brings us together in such unique ways."
> — Avis Ridley-Thomas

Journalism professor A.J. "Jack" Langguth and Department of Public Safety community service officer Jaccoma Maultsby were designated the USC faculty volunteer and USC staff volunteer of the year, respectively. Greta Pruitt, principal of the 32nd Street-USC Visual and Performing Arts Magnet Center and a School of Education alumna, was the winning USC alumni volunteer.

"These volunteers have improved the quality of life for our close neighbors," said Jane G. Pisano, vice president for external relations and presenter of the five Good Neighbor Awards. "I hope their example will motivate many more USC staff, faculty, and alumni — in addition to students — to volunteer their time for community projects."

Los Angeles City Councilman Mark Ridley-Thomas, was slated to speak, but his heavy election schedule did not permit him to appear. His wife, Avis Ridley-Thomas, spoke in his stead and lauded the merits of volunteerism.

"(Volunteering) is truly more precious than gold," Ridley-Thomas said. "It brings us together in such unique ways."

Student award winner Karen Cifarelli also commented on the merits of volunteering.

"We live in such a diverse city that it's so important that people connect," she said. "It's not about sequestering different ethnicities in different areas. It's all about building bridges to make that community tighter. To be recognized as being a part of this process is an awesome, incredible feeling."

Crandall echoed the feeling of pride, saying it was an honor just to present the awards.

"What we're talking about tonight is just scratching the surface of what these people have done," he said. "It's so impressive and inspiring — a true delight."

feeling even more pressure, Ryan wrote.

Budget problems are not expected to interfere with the service at County+USC Medical Center. In fact, as reported earlier in the Daily Trojan, a new 15-story tower is being planned to take the place of the existing General Hospital. The county will absorb the $1.2 billion required to replace the 1932 building, which suffers from structural and safety problems.

The new building will complement the $27 million the medical school has invested in new faculty and facilities. This investment was meant to combat the problems in the health care industry. Ryan thought the best way to generate new research dollars and clinical dollars was to invest in excellent researchers and clinical practitioners.

Although USC Medical School has yet to receive the benefits of those investments, Ryan expects that the returns on those investments will come later on.

Ryan's plan to "grow ourselves out of our deficit" has reaped some rewards. The school's revenue has grown by $4.2 million to a total of $56.2 million. But this has not been enough to cover the $9.6 million increase in expenses associated with improving quality, Ryan noted in the initial letter.

Tenured faculty members are protected from layoffs but non-tenured staff would be subject to the cuts.

In order to help ease tensions and keep the budget cutting process as open as possible, Ryan set up hours when faculty could meet him without appointments, from noon to 2 p.m. each Friday, from March 31 through May 5. In addition, he has encouraged the faculty to make suggestons to the Faculty Committee, chaired by Joseph Van Der Meulen, vice president of health affairs.

An information line has also been set up at (213) 342-1565, Ryan wrote in his second letter, to "answer questions, disseminate information and address concerns about any rumors."

On June 23, a meeting of all School of Medicine faculty will be held from 3 to 4 p.m. in the Meyer Auditorium.

Water polo at West Regional

By Joanne Tran
Staff Writer

Coming off a mid-week loss to UCLA, the USC women's water polo team will compete in the Division II Western Regional Qualifying Tournament, held at Pomona College this weekend.

Today, the No. 1 Women of Troy will play two schools: Claremont at 2 p.m. and Occidental at 6 p.m.

On Saturday, USC will face No. 2 Redlands at 9 a.m., followed by a 1 p.m. match against Pomona.

"Redlands is the main team to beat," USC Coach Jovan Vavic said.

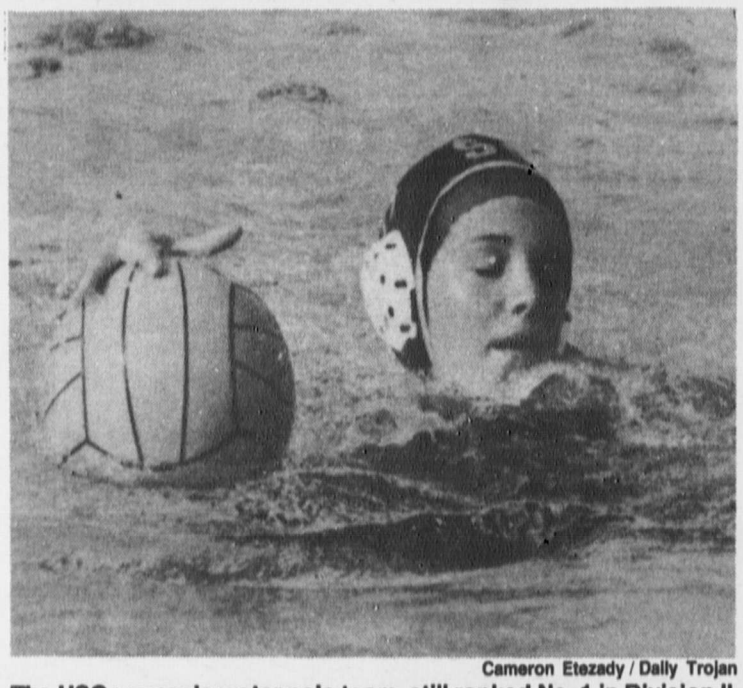
USC has met Redlands three times before, losing the first match but winning the two after that.

On Tuesday, USC met cross-town rival UCLA in Westwood.

The Women of Troy were defeated again by the No. 5 Bruins by a score of 8-2.

The Trojans and Bruins had met earlier this season, with UCLA earning a 10-2 victory on Feb. 24 at McDonald's Swim Stadium.

USC struck first on a goal by Christina McCall. But it was all UCLA after that, as Bruin Stephanie Natcher had the next two goals, and the first quarter ended with UCLA leading, 3-1.



Cameron Etezady / Daily Trojan

The USC women's water polo team, still ranked No. 1 in Division II, takes part in the Division II Western Regional this weekend.

By halftime, the Bruins scored twice more. Paige Erickson and Heather Wright scored in the second period, giving UCLA a 5-1 advantage.

The Bruins scored once again in the third quarter on a Molly Barnes goal, making the score 6-1.

McCall scored once again for USC in the fourth, but the Bruins scored twice on goals by Devon Brewer and Jill Buckley to close out the scoring.

Vavic said that although UCLA outscored USC, "we outplayed them."

Vavic said the Bruins' victory was due to goalie Nicolle Payne, who came up with eight saves. Payne plays on the U.S. National 'A' team.

With the win, UCLA — a Division I school — improved its record to 7-5 as USC fell to 10-9.

Men: Doubles point will again be critical

The doubles team managed to win only one of the three doubles sets in the first match.

"We could win the second and third-seed doubles (against UCLA)," Fernando Samayoa said. "But that first team is really good. We have to worry about the bottom two seeds."

The Bruins, second in the Pac-10 behind Stanford, are coming off of wins over California and Fresno State by scores of 5-2 and 4-3, respectively.

The Trojans defeated UNLV, 7-0, on Tuesday following a 5-2 loss to Stanford on Saturday.

"I think we have a better chance this time around because we're playing better tennis," Samayoa said. "We have worked hard on doubles during practice and now it's paying off."

The match has an added incentive as the Trojans are looking to wrap up an eighth seed and skip the regional playoffs of the NCAAs.

"We have to defeat the Bruins in order to solidify our No. 8 seed in the NCAA Tournament," Adam Peterson said. "I think we match up pretty well against them. We'll win if we continue to play like we did (against UNLV)."

The top singles match pits No. 14 Robert Janecek from UCLA against Brett Hansen, while Peterson will take on Eric Taino.

In the No. 4 position, Manny Ramirez will try to rebound from a loss to Matt Breen earlier in the season.

"I guarantee a win in my match against UCLA," Ramirez said. "I'm really ready for this match. This match is the biggest one of the season for us."

Both teams faced top-ranked Stanford during the first week of April with the Trojans losing, 5-2, and UCLA falling, 4-3.

Women: Need wins over higher-ranked opponents

the higher-ranked team. It's a great position to be in. There's a real excitement around here."

Especially because the Bruins (15-4) are in town after suffering back to back defeats against Stanford and California last weekend. Rankings, records and future seedings become moot.

"You come to USC and there's this thing that happens," junior Suzie Italiano said. "You're just conditioned to not like (the Bruins)."

Even more so when they've already beat you once this year, 5-1, at their place.

"The last time we played UCLA, we had the potential to win," Burt said. "We had the opportunity to position ourselves for the doubles games, but we didn't do it. And hopefully our flat spots are behind us. We're playing well now and it's important to keep the momentum up."

And while a close loss is still a loss in the record book, it may turn into something else in the future.

"I'm seeing the excitement in the girls," Burt said. "They're pumped up. It was a great feeling to walk off the court after playing a really good team and know you had a shot to beat them and know that next week you get them at home. We're ready to play."

Volleyball: Trojans have won two of last six matches

The Cardinal (16-6, 12-5) is on a five-match winning streak, and has not lost a game in those five matches.

Five of Stanford's regulars are hitting above .300. Mike Lambert leads the team with 556 kills, and Matt Fuerbringer follows with 452.

"We have to try to focus at the end of the season," middle blocker Szilard Kovacs said. "As a team, we have to be mentally prepared. (Wednesday's win) was good in that it gave us confidence before the harder games.

"We'll beat UOP and we can beat Stanford, though we lost to them, but we're a better team than Stanford."

The Trojans have won only two of their last six matches, but two of those losses came at the UCLA Classic, which had no bearing on the MPSF standings.

Kovacs leads the team with a .394 hitting percentage, followed by Seiffert at .354.

Senior Jason Mulholland has 426 kills, first on the team, and will probably play in the weekend's matches, despite still not having recovered from pneumonia.

One bad year shouldn't be death penalty

The criticism I've come to understand about Title IX is that any first-year women's team will not produce immediately, so why bother?

Yet, go down the line and you'll find men's teams that have been around for a second year or more and can do even worse. They are at least given the chance to improve.

Case in point:

Women's water polo was a good addition to USC athletics because it has shown that a women's team can produce, and soon.

The Women of Troy have already vaulted to the top spot of the Division II rankings. So far, they have a winning record at 10-9.

Then, look at something like the UC San Diego volleyball team. This season, it has produce one win out of 21 matches.

On Wednesday night, the USC men's volleyball team played against the Toreros at the North Gym. The Trojans won in three games. The first was 15-0. The next two were also not very close.

But on that fateful Wednesday night, UC San Diego proved that a bad time can befall any team, women's or men's, and it should just be given time to do what it needs to do to get better.

This was one match that showed just how bad a team can fall before finally getting up and improving. This goes for first-year teams and for teams that just aren't good.

The match was less a vision of two quality teams playing an exciting match and more of a series of bloopers and blunders.

Though it was fun, or funny, to watch UC San Diego fumble, you know the program is not going to be thrown out at the end of the season and that it will be given a chance to get better.

And that road to improvement will take a while, a long while, if Wednesday's match was any indication.

Game one was over in less than 15 minutes, with the Toreros not scoring because they rarely had the ball.

In the beginning of game two, Russell Brock was serving for USC, the ball sailed over the net into a San Diego player's hands, who passed it along to his right, but there was no one standing there. Point, USC.

The first two points the Toreros scored came not because they finally got on track, but because Trojan Chirs Guigliano's enthusiasm got the better of him and he returned two of San Diego's serves out of bounds.

UC San Diego's athletic department could say why bother to the men's sports, but they won't. They'll be given a chance to improve.

Women's water polo has done a lot in one year. Hopefully, if it hits a bad patch, people won't be saying why bother with women's sports altogether.

Trojans hold on to beat Cardinal

Baseball survives late rally to earn 7-5 win on road

By Greg Keraghosian
Assistant Sports Editor

In the first of a critical three-game series, the USC baseball team struck first.

The No. 10 Trojans jumped out to an early lead, then held on to outlast No. 16 Stanford, 7-5, on Thursday at Sunken Diamond in Palo Alto.

With its seventh straight win, USC moved to within 1 1/2 games of the first-place Cardinal in the Pacific 10 Southern Division, though it still trails second-place California.

For a while, it seemed as if the Trojans (28-15, 11-8) would earn an easy victory, as they jumped all over inexperienced starting pitcher Todd Bartels (2-2) for eight hits and five runs in his 4 1/3 innings and took a 6-1 lead entering the seventh.

USC center fielder Walter Dawkins hit Bartels' first pitch over the left-field fence for his sixth home run to set the early tone. Dawkins went 3-for-5 with two runs batted in.

Meanwhile, USC had ace starter Randy Flores on the mound. Looking for his fourth straight complete game and second straight shutout, Flores (8-2) lost his bid at the latter when he gave up an RBI single to Stanford catcher A.J. Hinch in the bottom of the first.

Still, Flores took a 6-1 lead entering the bottom of the eighth inning. That was when the Cardinal (22-15, 12-6) made its move.

After scoring a run in the eighth, the Cardinal knocked out Flores and nearly knocked out USC in the bottom of the ninth inning, as it scored three unearned runs thanks to a Derek Baker error.

Flores was relieved with two out in favor of Justin Parle. After Parle allowed a hit to the only batter he faced, closer Jason Garner entered the game. Garner recorded the final out to earn his division-high ninth save of the season.

Flores allowed six hits and two earned runs. After striking out a career-high 12 batters in his last start, he had only one strikeout on Thursday.

USC hosts Pacific tonight, then Stanford

Volleyball needs at least one win to help playoff chances

By Marisol Alanis

With a Mountain Pacific Sports Federation berth in the balance, the two matches that the No. 11 USC men's volleyball team will host this weekend are significant.

The first match will be against Pacific (7-14, 3-14 in the MPSF) at the Lyon Center tonight at 7.

The big match for the Trojans (10-11, 7-9), though, will be the one on Saturday night when they play No. 3 Stanford at the Lyon Center at 7:30 p.m.

"We're fired up for Stanford and UOP," middle blocker Eric Seiffert said. "We've been playing back-to-back all season. We'll get what needs to be done."

After defeating UC San Diego on Wednesday, USC moved one step closer to the playoffs.

With that victory, the Trojans tied Pepperdine for the eighth and final playoff spot, as each team has seven wins. The other two teams in the hunt, UC Irvine and San Diego State, have six wins.

With the Anteaters playing matches against No. 8 Brigham Young and No. 1 UCLA, and San Diego State also playing one of its last two matches against the Bruins, USC would likely jump ahead of the three teams with at least one win this weekend.

"Every game is important," USC Coach Jim McLaughlin said. "(Tonight) we want to win and just get into an offensive rhythm. We're just going to take each game one at time. We've been working on blocking the tendencies of our opponents."

Tennis teams battle UCLA at Marks Stadium

Men's squad calls today's match most important of season

By Joseph Soqui
Staff Writer

In what its players have deemed the most important game of the season, the USC men's tennis team hosts cross-town rival UCLA today at Marks Tennis Stadium at 1:30 p.m.

"Every time we play UCLA, it's always intense," Manny Ramirez said. "It's a match we have to win."

The last time the two teams met — on March 16 in Westwood — the No. 4 Bruins (16-3, 6-1 in the Pacific 10 Conference) defeated the No. 9 Trojans (13-5, 4-3), 4-3.

USC failed to capture the doubles point, which was the deciding factor.

The doubles loss began a streak that saw USC lose the point in five straight matches, including unranked San Jose State and Utah.

"The doubles point is going to be the key," USC Coach Dick Leach said. "Our doubles play has improved as of late."

Women enjoy their role of underdog for Saturday's match

By Terry Brown
Staff Writer

Most 7-11 teams aren't content with a No. 25 national ranking. They're overjoyed. Unless, of course, it's the USC women's tennis team, which hosts No. 4 UCLA on Saturday at Marks Stadium at noon. Then it's almost an insult.

"This ranking really motivates us," USC Coach Ed Burt said. "Now we get the chance to go out there and show everybody that we're better than it."

But they have to do it against No. 4 UCLA, No. 7 Stanford and No. 10 California as they close out the regular season. A win against any of the three schools would virtually guarantee the Women of Troy a spot in the NCAA Tournament, Burt said. But they're not looking for just one.

"When you're ranked below a team, it's kind of fun," Burt said. "Because we know we have a shot at beating them and the pressure is on them, being
